

Hiroshi Fujimoto was one of Dr. Fukui's students. He worked for Dr. Fukui from 1965 until 1982. During this period, he spent a year and a half at Cornell University, working for Dr. Roald Hoffmann. At present, he is a professor in the Division of Molecular Engineering, which was founded in Kyoto University about a year after Dr. Fukui's receipt of the Nobel Prize.