

Herbert Kiesling is a Professor Emeritus of Economics and Public and Environmental Affairs at Indiana University in Bloomington. A holder of undergraduate and masters degrees from Washington University in St. Louis and a PhD from Harvard University (1966), he was, over the first part of his career, occupied mostly with the economics of schools and state and local government finance. His publications have appeared in, amongst others, The Review of Economics and Statistics, The National Tax Journal, The Economics of Education Review, The American History Review, The Canadian Economic Journal, Public Finance, The Educational Technology Review and The American Economic Review. More recently, he has authored two books, Taxation and Policy Analysis: A Welfare-Economic Critique of Tax-Policy Analysis (1992) and Collective Goods, Neglected Goods: Dealing with Methodological Failure in the Social Sciences (1999). These books have dealt with the question of whether the academic social sciences may have been overly restrictive in dealing with some human collective goods (communitarian other-regarding collective goods).
