

Dr Vanya Ewart is currently a researcher at the National Research Council Institute for Marine Biosciences, Canada. She also lectures Biochemistry at the Dalhousie University. She has been awarded the following: the Medical Research Council of Canada's Fellowship with the Department of Biochemistry, University of Toronto and Department of Microbiology and Infectious Diseases, University of Calgary from 1993-1996. She has also contributed to the industrial development on biotechnology in her research in fishes and has lead a team project funded by the Canadian aquaculture and fish processing company, which has successfully developed new scalable processes for the purification of valuable biologicals from fish blood and testing.